Main Page

Introduction

The main goal of this research group is to develop a high throughput protocol to measure material ductility. The project includes both simulation and experimentation that leads to building the new testing device. Please find details of each relevant small projects toward the research group’s goals from following links:

- Simulation
- Experiments
- Meeting debriefing